A prosecution may be had upon any one of these several crimes, and on conviction the defendant may be punished for any one of them, although one or more of the other crimes may also be committed. There is no rule of law which prohibits the State from prosecuting a defendant under any of these different offenses. Id. 8 Although the district court did not make a specific ruling on the constitutionality of these instructions, it did reject the state's proposed charge as argumentative, and used the jury instructions quoted above. The court based its conclusion that the instructions were improper on the instruction's failure to properly inform the jury of its duty, and on the fact that it was reversible error to instruct the jury on the effect of a verdict of guilty 9 The Supreme Court has recognized that "there is a specific constitutional right to a lesser included offense instruction in only 'rare cases.'"
